

Call Of Duty: TGL-Pro announces participants

The Total Gaming League [TGL] is back for another round and has announced a season 2 for Pro Teams.

Just recently, TGL had announced that they would be again starting up their motors to give gamers another competitive league to take a part in. One of the games that they had chosen to have a competition in was Call of Duty 4, a game that they have already had experience running a season of where the usual Team EG vs Team Pandemic final took place. This time around not as many highly competitive teams have decided to sign-up, more than likely because TGL has yet to announce any type of prize.

It is a good sign for CoD to see TGL back in action because it, along with CEVO, were the two leagues that the COD community could count on for some good matches and competition. The following teams are the ones chosen to compete in the TGL Professional Division.

- Area 51 Gaming
- BackSlash Gaming
- Blight
- EYESports
- Fivestar
- Frontline
- MoBdeep
- Ninja Strike Force
- Team Awakening
- Team Binary
- Team MugNMouse
- Zen Mechanics

Good luck to all the teams competing in TGL's Season 2 of Call of Duty 4 for the PC.

via gotfrag